Adoption of human rights training within SSU Academy now vital, say experts after final leg of programme

"Human rights is at the heart of reform, and the successful transformation of the SSU in line with international best practices is at the heart of civilian security sector reform. Human rights is one among several areas that EUAM has been assisting the SSU with.

Last week, the European Union Advisory Mission (EUAM) completed a nationwide programme of human-rights training for officers from the Security Service of Ukraine (SSU). The programme was an ambitious one, because it was the first dedicated, stand-alone, training in human rights that the SSU has participated in.

Human rights is at the heart of reform, and the successful transformation of the SSU in line with international best practices is at the heart of civilian security sector reform. Human rights is one among several areas that EUAM has been assisting the SSU with. EUAM has favoured a systemic approach to reform of the SSU, for example by providing strategic advice for the drafting of the ‘Concept on SSU reform’. The Concept is still awaiting the approval of the Ukrainian president.

In order to enhance transparency and communication with the general public, EUAM also supported the design and production of the SSU annual report earlier this year.

The human-rights training applied the ‘train-the-trainers’ approach, and trainers from the Academy of the SSU were involved from the start. EUAM experts expect that the SSU will institutionalise human rights as part of its own training curriculum at its Academy.

Transparency, accountability, reactiveness — EUAM advisers train Ukrainian police press officers in effective communication with the media

Nowadays, no one would disagree that communication is important, especially for any public institution. It is also a well-known fact that effective communication leads to transparency, accountability and public trust. This is the reason why the EU Advisory Mission Ukraine (EUAM) is assisting the state agencies within its mandate with communications trainings tailored to their needs.

A communication training for press officers of the National Police of Ukraine, organised jointly with the Estonian Centre of the Eastern Partnership and NATO Information and Documentation Center in Ukraine on 27-28 July 2017, was one of the many delivered by the EUAM Strategic Communications team for communication officers of the Mission’s partners. This time, the training focused on copywriting techniques, use of social media and crisis communications.

guest speaker, shared interesting examples of how the Estonian police communicates with the public. According to Ilmar, it is important not only to inform the public about crimes which have been committed and the basic details of police investigations (even if the Estonian police, in principle, avoids providing a running commentary on ongoing investigations). It is equally important to conduct preventive work, listen to the needs of citizens and respond to them.
